Where learning is closely linked to everyday life, it becomes easier for adults, especially for those with few qualifications. Job-specific basic skills training is geared to concrete job descriptions, addressing specific problems encountered at work. The objective of this project is to develop and pilot a training programme for trainers that will enable them to provide basic skills training on site in companies and in other vocationally relevant contexts.

This project addresses adults who, due to personal circumstances, have neither been able to sufficiently learn the basic skills of reading, writing and maths, nor the use of information and communication technologies. It gives them the opportunity to catch up on what they have missed, brush up forgotten skills and acquire new ones.

The goal of this project is to encourage active ageing and foster intergenerational solidarity in Europe. It focuses on social competence and examines the question of how different generations can support each other in increasing their competence. Older people are given an active role in this process: they are invited to share their experience, and in particular their social skills, with young people in order to help them develop, acquire or enhance social competence. Skills such as assertiveness, effective communication, critical thinking and dealing with criticism, emotional intelligence and intercultural competence are becoming increasingly important in the workplace. Training modules are developed in order to achieve the project goals.

The objective of this project is to counteract youth unemployment in Europe using new approaches to education and employment. One of these approaches is practice-oriented learning, which is applied in production schools and characteristic of similar concepts of teaching and learning. The project tries to document and validate the outcomes of such non-formal learning in order to make them visible so that they can be utilized. The various procedures, methods and approaches will be compared and the possibility of integrating them into the traditional formal systems of education in the project partner countries will be examined.

This project aims at improving basic skills in Upper Austria. Learners are taught in small groups, which allows drawing on their real-life experience. Their needs determine the pace of learning, the selection of topics and the level of difficulty of the assignments. Connected to everyday experience and without time pressure, basic skills may be acquired or honed.

The network of educational guidance and counselling in Upper Austria unites seven Upper Austrian providers of counselling services, offering high-quality educational guidance and counselling throughout the province of Upper Austria. Counselling is free of charge and provider-neutral. Among the topics are further training and re-orientation, return to work (after a break), educational qualifications for adults, funding and grants for (vocational) education and training as well as recognition in Austria of competences and qualifications obtained abroad. In particular, the existing “Competence plus Guidance” model, which has already been tried and tested by several educational counselling providers in Austria, was supplemented with additional personal guidance units to allow advisers to work more closely with the participants towards their own individual educational goals. The workshops are offered across Upper Austria for people over 40 with few qualifications.

Digital Job Identities

Programme: Erasmus+
Project number: 2015-1-AT01-KA202-005045
Project period: Sept. 2015–Aug. 2017
Contractor: BFI Oberösterreich

In line with the strategic framework for European co-operation in education and training (ET 2020) the project “Digital Job Identities” is designed to help raise the level of youth employment. A specific concern is the improvement of the digital skills of young people and their teachers and trainers. The use of social media for interactive job applications and knowing how to build a digital CV are intended to help young people present their competences and skills and successfully start a career after completing their education and training.

Stakeholders from nine organisations co-operate in the nationwide network "ePSA", with the aim of implementing the new compulsory school leaving regulations in a manner adapted to the needs of adults. The project partners have planned a wide range of activities, they design materials and organise events in the field of further education and training, development, research and networking. The aim of the project is to create fair, diversity-oriented learning environments and to facilitate the transition to further education, vocational education and training and the labour market.

This integration project offers educational and qualification opportunities to people who have been granted asylum or who are entitled to subsidiary protection and to non-EU nationals with a command of German at A2 or B1 level. In three regions of Upper Austria, preparatory courses are held: in health and social care work and in drywall construction (Linz / Steyr), in warehouse work and shelf stocking (Wels / Kirchdorf / Grieskirchen), and for work in the catering industry (Salzkammergut). The qualifications obtained are designed to prepare learners for entering the job market and to provide easy access to vocational education and training. The participants acquire practical knowledge, take exams and gain valuable experience in the respective industries.

This project deals with support for families at risk of social exclusion and with the social-pedagogic tools available in social work for use with this target group. The objective is to increase the effectiveness of social worker interventions. In recent years, family assistance has turned out to be an effective measure for supporting families in difficult situations. Therefore, this project is dedicated to an exchange of specific good practice, and tools and methods for family assistance will be developed, tested and incorporated into everyday work. The main focus is on motivation, planning and case management.

In the course of the project "The internet – (not) an unlegislated space", a transnational consortium is developing a web-based app for parents (and for users in general) to help them take more personal responsibility for data protection and data security, thus leading to better protection of children and young people. This privacy app, DAPPS for short, is intended as a learning tool for parents in order to improve their media skills. By means of interactive games and learning units essential information on copyright, technical safety, safe content, advertising, cyberbullying etc. is provided.

This project focuses on people who have been granted asylum or who are entitled to subsidiary protection in Austria as well as other non-EU citizens. It helps them to develop their language skills and individual competences, to prepare for work and to integrate into Austrian society. Further education courses are offered in the districts of Braunau, Linz, Steyr, Vöcklabruck and Wels. They include

- language training in an intercultural context,
- educational counselling, career guidance and job application training,
- basic IT skills,
- information on life in Austria,
- the module "Connecting People", aimed at improving communication between new arrivals and native Austrians, as well as
- cycle courses.

Using social media comes naturally to teenagers and young adults and is firmly embedded in their daily routines. In addition, as smartphones have become more common, the younger generation is always online and involved in virtual worlds. However, the constant use of online media has dangerous aspects, too. Cyberbullying and sexting are forms of bullying that occur through the use of e-mails, instant messaging, chat rooms or mobile phones. These digital attacks hound victims even in the familiar environment of their own homes, depriving them of any safe space. Moreover, insults, derision and compromising photographs keep circulating on the internet in an endless multimedia loop. Therefore, by way of education and prevention, BFI Upper Austria, together with the other project partners, is developing a training module for youth social workers as well as accompanying study guides and learning materials.

The project focuses on the retraining of employees in the Slovak Republic for jobs with realistic employment opportunities. The main goal is to transfer elements of the well-established Austrian and German dual system of vocational education and training (VET) to selected qualification programmes in Slovakia. For this purpose, a comparative analysis of the respective VET programmes in the three partner countries is carried out. In addition, examples of good practice that have already been successfully transferred to and integrated into the Slovak VET system will be collected. Another project activity is the implementation of train-the-trainer programmes for specific jobs in order to spread relevant knowledge about the dual VET system.

Basic skills training in the workplace provides opportunities for people with basic skills deficiencies. Tailored to the specific needs of both employees and employers, it ensures the transfer of the acquired skills to the daily routines in the workplace.

For workplace learning to succeed, trainers are needed who are able to teach basic skills in general and also have practical and theoretical expertise in VET. In the train-the-trainer courses developed within the framework of this project, they can acquire the specific competences required for basic skills training in the workplace.

Physical exercise and a balanced diet are decisive factors in active and healthy ageing. This project aims to contribute to the well-being and vitality of older people. What is innovative is that exercises and healthy eating are seen as integral to care at home for the elderly. Accordingly, the project focuses on developing an e-learning platform for age-adjusted physical activity and nutrition, to be used in the training of health care staff and by other caregivers as well.

The objective of this project is close, sustainable co-operation of the various interest groups in the wood and especially in the furniture industry. Above all, this includes businesses, employers' associations, trade unions and vocational education and training providers. The main concern of the project is to adapt the existing job profiles and curricula to match skills and competences with labour market needs. This includes organisational, social and emotional competences as well as entrepreneurial thinking and technical skills. New guidelines and methods (e. g. e-learning) are to allow for a more comprehensive use of the dual system of apprenticeship.

The Austrian Academy of Continuing Education (wba) is run by the Co-operative System of Austrian Adult Education, a joint initiative of adult education providers and the Federal Institute for Adult Education. wba validates and recognises the competences of adult educators in accordance with clearly defined standards. It awards a vocational qualification on two levels (wba certificate and wba diploma in four categories: for teachers / trainers, education managers, counsellors and librarians). Innovative in its approach and accompanied by academic research, this project is aimed at the continued professionalization and quality development of Austrian adult education.

The objective of the DUNJA project is to prepare participants for a training programme, a course or a job. In line with this objective, participants acquire the basic skills necessary for reaching their educational and career goals. The basic skills training is designed for ten participants who are taught and counselled by two trainers; it can be attended either part-time or as an intensive course. Based on individual testing to determine the level of skills at the beginning of the course, learners choose from various modules to improve their reading, writing, maths and ICT skills, in accordance with their own educational goals.

The project addresses persons (with or without immigrant origins) who aim for compulsory school leaving or apprenticeship qualifications, but lack the necessary basic skills and want (or need) to gain these skills in a short space of time, as well as people with a migrant background who wish to go on a health and social care course but whose knowledge of German is insufficient for them to cope with the study material.

The overall project focuses on a more professional approach to compulsory schooling opportunities that are suitable for adult learners. Regional availability, different formats and a wide range of topics are to contribute to this. BFI Salzburg is in charge of developing study materials based on the principles laid down in the curriculum and related to the intended learning outcomes specified there. In addition, a substantial collection of exam questions is compiled. The materials will be drawn up in workshops with a stable expert group of participants, e. g. active trainers, examiners and other experts as well as teachers at schools where examinations are held in the province of Salzburg.

The majority of persons requiring care receive care and support in their own homes. The 24-hour home care market is booming, albeit without any minimum quality standards. At present, there is no standardised training for care workers. This project aims at creating greater transparency around 24-hour home care for the benefit of all those involved (people in need of care, their families and care workers) in order to ensure higher-quality care services in the future as well as an overall increase in qualified persons willing to work in this field. Focusing on immigrants looking for work, a specific qualification programme for 24-hour care workers, including learning and teaching resources, will be developed and piloted in the course of the project. In addition, practical guidelines for family members will be made available.

Basic skills training in the workplace identifies specific job requirements in companies, correlates them with basic skills, analyses the existing competence of staff and, together with management and employees, defines appropriate learning goals and intended learning outcomes. The corresponding training programme is oriented towards participants, resources, competences and processes.

Within the framework of this project, a training course is organised for trainers, qualifying them to carry out basic skills training, either directly in the workplace or in institutions providing vocational education and training for adults.

The objective of this project is to help raise the level of digital skills among adults. To this end, a module for training trainers as well as practical methods for implementation in adult education are developed and made available. The methods are to be designed in such a way that they can be used irrespective of specific content. For the purpose of the project, “digital competence” is defined as comprising information, communication, content creation, safety and problem solving (in line with the Digital Competence model developed by Anusca Ferrari).
